The Pearson and the National University of Singapore (NUS) Business School, has announced the launch of the Emerging Leaders Management Acceleration Programme (ELMAP), a blended executive programme for young business professionals. The admissions to the programme is open till October 6, 2017. Interested applicants can find details of the program at <http://pearson-professional.com/career-programs/nus/>.

Commencing on October 14, 2017, this programme brings together business skills and superior content from NUS to offer in-depth understanding of various functional areas of management and leadership. With an approach focused on the program aims to better equip business leaders of the future with desired skills to drive results and execute business strategy effectively.

Working professionals with two to 10 years of work experience, who are keen to work in cross-functional teams or need to coordinate with multiple business functions, would benefit most from the six-month part-time weekend course.

The programme will equip participants with the fundamental concepts of leadership, business strategy, marketing and sales management, big data, service operations, supply chain management, business innovation and finance analytics. Additionally, the programme will include four to six webinars with industry leaders. Candidates will be awarded with a certificate from NUS Business School upon successful completion of the programme.

The direct-to-desktop 'live-online' classroom sessions with NUS Business School faculty members will provide flexibility to participants to learn from anywhere.
